Inflation rose by 8.3% in August 2022, largely driven by necessities like food, shelter and medical care. For the most part, pandemic-related stimulus payments have stopped. Meanwhile, in a bear stock market, people's investments are losing value. It's no longer practical to sell investments — if you have them — for extra cash.

All these factors are leaving a lot of people scrambling to make ends meet, bolster their emergency savings and avoid using their credit cards to pay for everything from food to holiday gifts. For many, taking on a part-time gig is the solution. But there are also other ways to earn $1,000 in a week.
